

Do YOUR HORSES GET RESTLESS OR PANICKY WHEN STANDING TIED?

Animals, by natural instinct, are always on the watch for potential threats around them. When a horse is tied to an ordinary hitching post, he can't see what might be behind him. The resulting anxiety can feed upon itself, leading to potentially dangerous behavior. With The Patience Pole, horses can see 360 degrees around them. By moving its feet, the horse can move to a 'comfort zone'.

HOW DO YOU KEEP A
TIED-UP HORSE CALM?

THE PATIENCE POLE

RECOMMENDED
BY TRAINERS

THE PATIENCE POLE'S SWINGING ARM ALLOWS THE HORSE TO CIRCLE IN PLACE. THAT HELPS NERVOUS HORSES TO RELAX WHEN TIED.

THE PROBLEM

Sometimes, you need a horse to wait, until you're ready for him.

But horses can get restless when they're stuck to a hitching post. They might start pawing, cribbing, or pulling back. And when you retrieve them, an anxious horse is less fun to train and ride.

Experienced trainers say that teaching a horse to be patient in place is just as important as other practical lessons. Now, Allison Creek has the solution.

THE SOLUTION

The Patience Pole's 360 degree overhead arm gives your horse the freedom to move – safely.

Tethered to the arm with a chain or bungee, the horse doesn't feel quite so confined, and he soon learns to stand or circle quietly. The overhead tie also helps keep the horse from sitting back.

It becomes the horse's equivalent of a human's personal space and down time.

THE DETAILS

The 12 foot Patience Pole is made of high quality structural steel, with bearings that allow it to swing continuously, freely and quietly.

It's fabricated by Allison Creek's team of horse lovers, who guarantee their workmanship for five years.

Two people can easily install a Patience Pole in about 20 minutes. Just dig a hole, level the pole, and pour in concrete.
